grinned to herself. Chloe and Bethany were right – the only way to do this was to try and enjoy it. She just hoped she'd be in the first group to go. She wasn't sure she could stand waiting much longer.

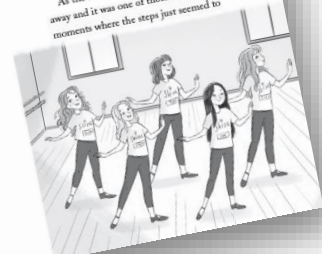

Luckily she was standing near the front and Tamara picked the first five girls she could see – Sara, Chloe and three Year Eight girls they didn't know. It felt so lonely, out in the middle of the huge studio.

Sara glanced back to Bethany and Lily, who were making thumbs-up signs at her and flashed a quick smile at them. Out of the corner of her eye, she spotted Elizabeth, looking contemptuous. The older girl was swishing her long blond hair about, trying to catch the attention of the casting team.

A grin of determination took over inside Sara. Elizabeth obviously wasn't nervous. She looked as though she was having the time of her life.

Sara knew she was a pretty good dancer. She wasn't as brilliant as some of her class, but there was no way she was going to let Elizabeth do better than her. The thought of how furious the snooty Year Eight would be if she, Sara, got a callback made a natural smile the easiest thing in the world.

As the music started, Sara's nerves melted away and it was one of those fantastic moments where the steps just seemed to
